

Introduction

Mainstream fashion! Why do others have to decide what I wear? I don't even want to begin to discuss the sufferings I go through most mornings to find a proper outfit for work that would actually fit me. Let's face it; most outfits are made for skinny catwalk models and not short little, chubby brats like myself. Mainstream fashion takes away the importance of being different. Take a look at a crowd of teenagers. They're more or less all the same inside and out. That's before anyone has even mentioned how the mainstream fashion industry upholds itself. Sometimes I wonder how it would have been if Eve had just not listened to that snake. Walk around naked and be totally happy!

Conclusion

We're all different. We think differently and we act differently. Teenagers should feel free to have their own opinion without being judged by their peers. The stress and agony of especially girls when they feel insufficient because of their body type or how they otherwise look is just not okay. Let's embrace diversity and take down the mainstream fashion industry that not only 'tricks' us to think and act a certain way but also uses children as hard labour.
